

Welcome

To organize the 8th IPA Conference is both a challenge and a serious commitment. Every year, the conference grows not only in terms of the number of its participants but also in terms of novel perspectives and research domains that join the interpretive challenge to positivism. It was therefore not easy to find a novel take on this important annual meeting.

The purpose of this year's edition is twofold. Since numerous academic institutions in Vienna deal with research on Science and Technology – and some of them are co-organizing this conference – the 8th IPA Conference focuses, first, on the intersection of interpretive policy analysis with Science and Technology Studies (STS). The dialogue between these two research programmes, both sensitive to meaning as well as social and historical context, has already been present during the past editions of the conference, and, related to that, a wish has been expressed on several occasions to make this dialogue more explicit. For that reason, we put central emphasis on this dialogue through both keynote events as well as through the Plenary roundtable where both IPA and STS researchers come together to address some of the pending issues of the past IPA conferences. Second, our aim was to arrange this dialogue around one central topic. By choosing conflict, one of the fundamental keywords of politics, we want to re-articulate the relation between experts and publics and address, at its background, the current research on democracy, governance and policy practices. These ideas are not entirely new, but since they have been investigated by both interpretive policy analysts and STS scholars, they provide us with an excellent framing for the dialogue.

With over 420 proposed papers coming in, we feel confident that our goal was achieved. After a challenging selection process we present more than 60 panels opening the dialogue in a number of ways: theoretical investigations and methodological debates take place beside analyses of current controversies in urban, environmental or technological domains. We hope that this selection will offer you not only three interesting days in Vienna but that it will open some new doors for you.

Putting together this rich programme would not be possible without the involvement of many Viennese institutions: The Department of Political Science at the University of Vienna has worked together with the Life-Science-Governance Research Platform (LSG), the Austrian Political Science Association (ÖGPW), the Department of Science and Technology Studies at the University of Vienna and the Institute of Forest, Environmental, and Natural Resource Policy at the University of Natural Resources and Life Sciences Vienna (BOKU). We want to thank all the partners for their contributions.

We hope you will enjoy the conference: be it through conflict or through dialogue.

Host Institutions & Cooperating Organisations

Department of Political Science, University of Vienna

The Department of Political Science (Faculty of Social Sciences) is one of the largest institutions for social science research and teaching in Europe, with over 5000 students. The Department's research focuses on the transformation of the form and function of governance, statehood and democracy in different policy areas, geographical regions and political spaces.

Life-Science-Governance (LSG), University of Vienna

The "Life-Science-Governance" Research Platform (LSG) is an interdisciplinary collaborative platform between a group of researchers at the Department of Political Science at the University of Vienna, with Herbert Gottweis as principal investigator, and the Max F. Perutz Laboratories (a joint venture of the University of Vienna and the Medical University of Vienna) at the Vienna Biocenter. They jointly address the interrelated topics of governance through and of the life sciences, and focus on current challenges that surround the introduction and utilization of science and technologies in modern biology and medicine.

Department of Science and Technology Studies, University of Vienna

The Department of Science and Technology Studies (Faculty of Social Sciences) aims at fostering reflexive debate concerning the developments of science, technology and society with scientists and students from all disciplines, but also with wider publics. The teaching program offered by the Department of Social Studies of Science includes single thematic courses as well as a specialized Master and PhD program.

Partners:

InFER, University of Natural Resources and Life Sciences Vienna (BOKU)

InFER, the Institute of Forest, Environmental, and Natural Resource Policy at the University of Natural Resources and Life Sciences Vienna (BOKU) is concerned with political science research on processes, instruments and institutions applied in a variety of environmental policies, including forest policy as a traditional focus. In the field of environmental and resource policies, research and teaching at InFER focus on sustainable development policies, climate change mitigation and adaptation policies, nature conservation, biodiversity and water protection policies.

ÖGPW / AuPSA

'AuPSA' stands for Austrian Political Science Association (Österreichische Gesellschaft für Politikwissenschaft – ÖGPW). Founded in 1970, the organization today consists of approximately 600 members from various fields of work related to politics and political science. The AuPSA is a member of the Central European Political Science Association (CEPSA), the European Confederation of Political Science Associations (ECPASA), and the International Political Science Association (IPSA). It aims at fostering political science research in Austria and advances its internationalization. Furthermore, the AuPSA publishes the Quarterly "Austrian Journal of Political Science" (ÖZP).

Additional generous support:

Department of City Administration 7

The Department of City Administration (Magistratsabteilung 7) seeks to position Vienna as an intellectually, culturally and economically competitive city with a high living standard. The Unit of Science and Research Funding contributes to fulfilling these aims by way of strategic support for particularly innovative scientific projects and events.

Vienna Convention Bureau

The Vienna Convention Bureau (VCB) aims to promote Vienna as Central Europe's leading conference city. It offers services free of charge to any national or international organizer of meetings and conventions. The VCB strives to raise awareness for and to support initiatives in the fields of Green Meetings, sustainability and Corporate Social Responsibility. The VCB was established in 1969 as a department of the Vienna Tourist Board with the assistance of the Municipality of Vienna and the Vienna Chamber of Commerce.

Pre-Conference Course on Interpretive Methods

In order to continue its successful history we organize a Pre-Conference Course on Interpretive Methods and Methodologies the day before the conference starts, on Tuesday, July 2nd 2013. Taking place already for the third time this day-long event is intended to introduce participants – from doctoral students to more seasoned researchers – to interpretive policy analysis. Participants of the Pre-Conference receive one ECTS point and a certificate of attendance.

The Pre-Conference is divided into a plenary session in the morning, and parallel sessions focusing on different methodological approaches in the afternoon. These afternoon sessions take on the form of interactive workshops where participants are invited to bring their questions to the discussion. It is not designed, however, for participants to present their work (for that see Methodology Workshops in the regular conference programme, Panel 100).

IPA2013 Keynote Speakers

John Law

Professor of Sociology at The Open University, and Co-Director of ESRC Centre for Research on Socio-Cultural Change (CRESC) and Director of the Social Life of Method Theme within CRESC.

He has written widely on the sociology of science and technology, organization, health-care, disasters, and social theory and methods, where his continuing concern has been with the materiality and spatiality of complexity. He works empirically, and his current work is on agriculture, farming and nature. Law is well known for Actor-Network Theory (ANT), which he developed together with Michel Callon, Bruno Latour and others. He advocates an interdisciplinary approach and has worked with anthropologists, sociologists, philosophers, engineers, medical practitioners, geographers and animal scientists. In his theories, he assumes that the world is materially and discursively heterogeneous, and he is concerned with the performativity of method.

Deborah Anne Stone

Research Professor in the Department of Government at Dartmouth College, New Hampshire, and Honorary Professor of Political Science at Aarhus University, Denmark.

She holds a B.A. in Russian Studies from the University of Michigan and a Ph.D. in Political Science from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Her research interests are in health and social policy and she is author of numerous books and articles on health policy, caregiving and public policy, disability, racial and ethnic disparities in health care, and altruism in public life. Her current work is on immigration and citizenship policies. Stone has held professorships at some of the most prestigious universities such as MIT, Brandeis University, Duke University, Yale University, Tulane University, National Chung Cheng University, and University of Bremen. In 2002, her book Policy Paradox won the American Political Science Association's Aaron Wildavsky Award for an Enduring Contribution to Policy Studies. In addition to scholarly publications, she has written for American Prospect, Nation, New Republic and Boston Review, and she is member of the Editorial Board of Critical Policy Studies. Since 2009 she has been helping to design and launch a public policy research institute in Nepal, the Niti Foundation. She is currently president of the Health Politics and Policy section of the American Political Science Association.

Asian Policy Roundtable: Contributions from STS and IPA

Following up the Roundtable on Asia at the IPA 2011 in Cardiff which brought in the explicit dialogue between interpretive approaches in Europe and Asia, this year the Asia Roundtable focuses on the dialogue between IPA and STS scholars working in or with the Asian context. Along the red line of relationship between experts and publics, the roundtable wants to offer both case studies from particular countries and comparative perspectives.

Roundtable

Societies in conflict: Towards a Politics of Undecidability.

The Plenary Roundtable rethinks the issue of uncertainty that has shaped a number of works in STS, and that has also become powerful in the domains of Political Theory and Political Science. Speakers will present examples where uncertainty has raised a conflict or controversy. At the same time, they will give the discussions on uncertainty a different spin: while politics, very often, have to decide (in some way), they face the difficulty to do so. These decisions are frequently controversial. How do we cope with this situation as analysts, as practitioners? Can we (re)think something like a “Politics of Undecidability”? Moreover, with the rise of communication technologies, not only experts and publics get in touch in a different way but the aspects of communication technologies in general intervene in our analyses (be it in the field of sociology, political science or STS).

Nico Carpentier

Nico Carpentier is Associate Professor at the Communication Studies Department of the Free University of Brussels, Lecturer at Charles University in Prague, and Research Fellow at the Department of Social Sciences at Loughborough University in Leicestershire. He is also an executive board member of the International Association for Media and Communication Research (IAMCR) and was vice-president of the European Communication Research and Education Association (ECREA) from 2008 to 2012. Carpentier's theoretical focus is on discourse theory, his research interests are situated in the relationship between media, journalism, politics and culture, especially towards social domains as war and conflict, ideology, participation and democracy.

Kurt Imhof

Kurt Imhof, born in 1956, has been a full professor of sociology and media research at the University of Zurich since 2000. Originally, he was a draughtsman specializing in structural engineering, but he later went on to study history, philosophy and sociology at the University of Zurich. His dissertation was in the field of history. He then obtained a post-doctoral qualification as a lecturer in sociology and held positions as an assistant professor of sociology, as well as a visiting professorship of political science at the Universities of Zurich and Freiburg im Breisgau. His research activities focus on phenomena of social change, particularly on communication sociology. He co-founded the Center for Research on the Public Sphere and Society (FOEG) in 1997 in order to expand the research activities in his areas of interest. The foeg runs a large number of projects, which all share the goal of analyzing long-term social changes in modern society.

Helga Nowotny

Helga Nowotny is Professor emerita of Social Studies of Science, ETH Zurich and a founding member of the European Research Council. In 2007 she was elected ERC Vice President and in March 2010 succeeded Fotis Kafatos as President of the ERC. She holds a Ph.D. in Sociology from Columbia University, NY, and a doctorate in jurisprudence from the University of Vienna. Her current host institution is the Vienna Science and Technology Fund (WWTF). Helga Nowotny is a member of the University Council of the Ludwig Maximilians University Munich and member of many other international Advisory Boards and selection committees. From 2005 – June 2011 she was Chair of the Scientific Advisory Board of the University of Vienna. She is a Foreign member of the Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences and long standing member the Academia Europaea and recipient of several prizes and awards.

Barbara Prainsack

Barbara is Associate Professor at the Department of Social Science, Health & Medicine at King's College London. She earned her PhD in Political Science at the University of Vienna, Austria, in 2004. Her main research interest lies in the ways in which bioscience, religion and politics mutually constitute each other, and what effect this process has on how we understand ourselves as human beings, persons, and citizens, as well as on the emergence of regulatory approaches.

Beyond her rich publication activities, Barbara Prainsack is currently the United Kingdom's representative in the Domain Committee for Individuals, Societies, Culture and Health at COST (European Cooperation in Science and Technology); a member of the National Bioethics Council advising the Federal government in Vienna, Austria, and a Fellow of the British Royal Society of Arts. From 2010-2013 she chaired the European Science Foundation's (ESF) Forward Look on Personalized Medicine for the European Citizen. She serves on the editorial advisory board of journals including OMICS, Genetics Research, Personalized Medicine, Science as Culture, and New Genetics & Society.

Practice Panels: Science interacts with Politics

Practice seminars will bring policy analysis scholars into dialogue with policy workers such as civil servants and politicians. Building on the successful format of the series of practice seminars developed in former IPA conferences in Cardiff and Tilburg, practice seminars explore how to bring researchers and practitioners together around shared problems. The seminars will feature a variety of policy problems linked with the conference themes. Moreover they will experiment with different forms of presentations; policy workers will portray policy problems and policy scholars will react to these, also policy practitioners will be confronted with research and study results.

Practice Panel 1

ThinkForest – interaction between scientists and policy-makers: European Forest Governance at stake

Chair: Helga Pülzl

European Forest Institute @ INFER, BOKU University, Vienna

Participants:

Bernhard Budil

Secretary General, Association of Austrian Land and Forest Owners

Gerhard Mannsberger

Director General of the Forestry Department, Austrian Federal Ministry of Agriculture, Forestry, Environment and Water Management

Peter Mayer

Director, Federal Research and Training Centre for Forests, Natural Hazards and Landscape

Gerald Steindlegger

Theme and rationale for the session:

Forest governance beyond the national has become increasingly European over the years. Not only that a complex set of legal and non-legally binding instruments have evolved in Europe, but also complex set of structures emerged and a high number of actors are involved. This situation does not only create challenging situations of compliance, but also evokes inconsistencies, incoherence and conflict.

Forests, generally spoken, are owned individually and not collectively while collective goals of the public shall be met. Forests are therefore not at all uncontested as different priorities depending of ones situated view arise: while owners and forest workers mainly focus on production of goods and services, a number of actors aim primarily at protecting and, to some extend conserving the natural beauty and species composition. Others, again, are interested in the sustainable yield, health and the possibility to store carbon in trees. This panel aims at discussing new and innovative ideas between scientists and policy-makers on how this situation can be dealt with in order to strengthen both forest policy-making and implementation processes in the EU and Pan-European level.

The panel idea is based on a report – European Forest Governance: issues at stake and the way forward – that has been very recently prepared by scientists. The results will be shortly presented and thereafter discussed with panel participants.

Practice Panel 2

Democratisation of Science Policy?

Stakeholder Participation and Expert Consultation in Science Policy Work

Chair: Peter Biegelbauer

Austrian Institute of Technology

Speakers:

Christian Naczinsky

Austrian Ministry for Science and Research

Jeremy Rayner

University of Saskatchewan

Janus Hansen

Copenhagen Business School

Theme and rationale for the session:

The much discussed move from government to governance is a shorthand for the fact that politics has given up most of its efforts to directly steer society. This development is decried by some civil servants, others see it as a chance since the civil service has been overburdened by steering efforts. However governance arrangements, in which actors from civil service, society and economy cooperate, are no less demanding than were the older forms of governmental steering. In that sense, how can meaningful operation between different actor groups be achieved in science policy without again overburdening the civil service?

A side-effect of the change from older government structures and processes to newer governance arrangements is that the more traditional networks and forms of expertise and consultation are dissolving. In neo-corporatist political systems such as Austria, the Netherlands and Sweden this development is felt particularly strong, as there was traditionally an emphasis on coordinative network structures in these systems. Who should be asked for their opinion by way of “notice and comment” in science policy? Which stakeholders should be invited to react to civil service proposals? Are there ways to reach out to the informed public? Can social networks play a role in this endeavour? The development of governance arrangements has surprising repercussions on the EU level. When before national positions (e.g. the development of a new framework programme) were formed in complex processes of interactions between politicians, civil service and stakeholders from member states, such position papers now are largely missing and are created “on-the-fly”, i.e. in the process of negotiating a new policy. This may become problematic for large organisations such as multinational companies, but what does this mean for the possibility of smaller or non-organised interests to influence EU science policy initiatives? What does this mean for issues of transparency and accountability?

Practice Panel 3

How to Move Forward?

Participation, Cooperation and Coordination In Traffic Policy Work

Chair: Peter Biegelbauer

Austrian Institute of Technology (AIT)

Speakers:

Franz Schwammenhöfer

Austrian Ministry for Transport,
Innovation and Technology (BMVIT)

Markus Knoflacher

independent expert, Vienna

Sabine Weiland

Freie Universität Berlin

Theme and rationale for the session:

Traffic policy-making over time has become a daunting task. Planned roads, airports and train stations either end up with costs exploding or are not being built at all. Money, time and energy are lost in costly planning processes ending in protests of citizens, who want to have a say about their environment or in political stalemates between actors with differing goals.

Austrian law foresees citizen involvement in traffic planning, which however often takes place in a rather schematic and unflexible manner. Citizens sometimes invest time and energy into the process, but often achieve a very limited impact by taking part in the official procedures. Their frustration about the ways of being involved may have an impact on the readiness of taking part in such processes again and adds to a general feeling of being ignored by policy-makers. Policy-making is an activity in need of coordination between different actor groups. This pertains not only to the coordination between policy-makers and citizens, but also between these and other concerned stakeholders, between regions and the federal state and between federal ministries. In fact the coordination processes often result in policy blockages with actors advancing their interests rather than in the creation of better, more problem-adequate solutions. Mostly planning activities are carried out by civil servants. They cannot do this on their own and regularly consult with experts on traffic policy problems. How do civil servants and experts deal with this complex situation in their policy work? What are their problem views and how do they compare with perspectives from policy analysis? In general traffic policies should aim at being consensual, systemic, sustainable and transparent in the way they are being obtained and communicated. Yet at the moment they often fulfil these criteria only perfunctory. How can policy workers come closer to reaching these goals in an imperfect world? What could be role of policy analysis in supporting policy workers?

Practice Panel 4

Regulating Prostitution – Negotiating Moral Policy: Street Prostitution Policy in Vienna

Panel Convenors: Helga Amesberger, David Laws and Hendrik Wagenaar

Theme and rationale for the session:

In this practice seminar, four practitioners – a high-ranking administrator from the Women’s Department of the City of Vienna, a member of the Green Party (part of the governing coalition) of the Viennese parliament, a member of an NGO, and a prostitution activist – have agreed to share with the audience their experiences with designing and implementing measures to deal with street prostitution in Vienna. By way of background: With the new Viennese Prostitution Law 2011 (WPG 2011) street prostitution is prohibited in residential areas. The Viennese government followed in this respect primarily the interest of residents living in boroughs in which street prostitution took place. To expedite the implementation of the WPG 2011 a steering group was created in which political representatives, administrative agencies, police officials, and NGOs participate. One of its main efforts was to find zones for outdoor prostitution, but the planned designation of soliciting zones within residential areas failed so far due to the resistance of district politicians and residents, supported by the local press. Street prostitution is a politically sensitive issue. The ongoing resistance indicates that street based sex work is at least as much a matter of public order as of moral politics. In the end three areas, the Prater, the Auhof and an industrial area in the 23rd district, were allocated for street prostitution. Through an information campaign by NGO-outreach workers and the police, outdoor sex workers have moved to the new designated areas within a matter of days. On an average day about 120 street prostitutes work in the designated areas. However, the new law induced mobility – mobility to indoors (which was intended), to illegal apartment prostitution, some left the city or the country, new sex workers came in. One of the goals of the WPG 2011 was to improve the working conditions of sex workers. With regard to outdoor sex workers this goal has not been reached. The reallocation had a number of negative unintended consequences such as the lack of infrastructure for outdoor sex workers, crowding and fights among sex workers, pollution of parking lots, fining of sex workers who tried to use one of the “Stunden Hotels” near the Prater (because by crossing the street they moved outside the designated zone) and exercising sexual services in cars and in public spaces (which is forbidden). Furthermore, with the move of the Vienna University of Economics and Business to the Prater in September this year this so far legal soliciting zone will turn into a prohibition zone, with the consequence that again less space will be available for street prostitution. Clearly, street prostitution is a wicked problem.

We want to discuss two main questions with the participants and the audience to this practice seminar:

1. Are there better or worse ways to formulate the problem of street prostitution in Vienna?
2. What practically feasible and morally acceptable policy solutions can we design for this problem?

Methodology Workshops

The IPA methodology workshops seek to create a setting where newer scholars can benefit from focused interaction with more seasoned experts in their field. These 90-minute workshop sessions feature specialists in different areas of interpretive policy analysis. Following the approach employed in earlier conferences, the workshop sessions build on the idea of a “master-class” in musical studies. Two experienced researchers will meet a small number of researchers to discuss issues in applying a particular methodological strategy or method. The discussion will focus on questions raised by the participants, and their research, will be treated as case studies to generate and engage with relevant methodological issues.

The sessions are incorporated into the regular conference programme and are part of an effort to create a collaborative learning environment. The sessions are open to all conference participants.

Critical Policy Studies

Critical Policy Studies offers a unique forum for researchers and policy-makers to challenge established accounts of policy-analytic methods, to explore alternative approaches to policy-making, and to promote democratic governance. It moves beyond narrow empirical approaches to pay special attention to interpretive, argumentative and discursive approaches to policy-making. Although a rigorous academic journal, CPS engages with the practical aspects of policy-making that confront "real-world" practitioners. ## Österreichische Zeitschrift für Politikwissenschaft (ÖZP)

Since 1972, the Austrian Journal for Political Science (ÖZP) is a platform for political scientific research in Austria and Central Europe. ÖZP is indexed in SSCI and is open for submissions in German and English. The journal gives no preference for a social science research direction or a methodological approach. Although primarily interested in the current state of developments in Austria and Central Europe, articles and research reports are accepted regardless of the reference to Austria. Optional Second Conference Dinner at Viennese Heuriger
in Grinzing

Thursday
3 July 2013, 7.00 pm

Grinzing, in the northwest of Vienna, is famous for its typical Viennese wine taverns called "Heuriger". 'Heurig' means 'this year's' as an adjective in Austrian German and signifies the most recent year's wine that is traditionally served in those places.

From the Campus of the University of Vienna please take the tram (Nr. 44 or 43)
to Schottentor. One platform below you can find the station for the tram 38 to Grinzing.
Get off at Grinzing (final stop).
Distance tram stop to "Alter Bach Hengl" approximately 2 minutes.

Coffee and lunch
will be served at the Department of English, court 8.3, and in the Aula, court 1.11.

Food
there is a supermarket called "Billa" near to the Aula, in court 1.

Money:
there is an ATM machine on the campus, located in the building 1.6.2, court 1.
Additionally there are cash machines in Alserstrasse 16 and Schwarzspanierstrasse 5 near to the campus.

Water:
tap water is drinkable in Vienna! You can refill your bottle from the conference bag, at any tap and enjoy mountain spring water from the Lower Austrian Alps.
